Problems Assembly

Flushing Meadow, Nov. 17. The United Nations General Assembly is now faced with a bewildering "Chinese puzzle" of five problems, all inter-linked.

1.—A complaint from Peking about the American bombing of Manchurian towns:

2.-A second Peking complaint of American aggression against Formosa, by the pro-Seventh Fleet in Formosan

3.-A Nationalist Chinese charge that the Soviet Union committed aggression, against China by alding the Communists since the war.

4.—A resolution sponsored by Britain, the United States and other powers, calling on the Chinese Communists to withdraw their troops from Koren. 5.-A charge by San Salvador press, radio and other media of that the Peking Government committed against the autonomous region

FROM LIONEL CRANE

Tokyo, Nov. 17. A guerilla chief who is believed to have his headquarters in the hills between Pyongyang and the front line is leading a force of 10,000 who are now becoming a real threat to the United Nations troops.

At first these guerillas, most of whom are North Koreans left behind in the advance northwards, were content to make isolated raids on food and clothing dumps. Now they have been welded into a well organised fighting force.

Under the control of their mystery leader they carry out night raids on railway stations, artillery batteries, main supply routes and lonely supply dumps.

They work in groups of 500 to a thousand and keep in touch with each other by radio and messenger.

Many of them are wearing stolen GI uniforms. They come down from the hills after dark, make their raids and vanish into well camouflaged positions before daybreak.

They have been driving steadily northward from the 38th parallel and in many villages they have compelled young men to join them at the point of the gun.

COMMENT OF THE DAY

HE public will not fail to appreciate made by the Full Court yesterday regarding the use of unloaded guns by robbers to intimidate their victims.

The decision—that the wielding of an unloaded revolver for the purpose of effecting a robbery constitutes an assault-was based on law, but we also regard it as a verdict of commonsense.

If a criminal can induce fear by displaying what he knows to be an innocuous weapon, but which his victim has every reason to believe is a lethal instrument, then he has accomplished his aim'and, quite rightly so far as we can see, places himself into the same category as the man who carries out his hold-up with a loaded revolver. Had judgment to the contrary been made the public would have viewed it with considerable misgiving and would correctly have felt that criminals were being given protection under the law to which they were not entitled. The judgment too, would appear to bring within its scope the use of toy or model pistols intended to intimidate, and gives point to our earlier comment this

How Dentist Wins a Tot's Confidence

THE PSYCHOLOGICAL APPROACH begins when an attendant offers a simple; explanation of her chart and what the session in chair will mean for this girl.

SQUIRTING WATER in the dentist's bowl is just as much fun as in wading pool, and although she is "tagged" for treatment, this patient reacts with a smile.

courses salitat to district her case with resulting eigerness to co-operate

Pride and envy are displayed by this trio as a patient boastfully exhibits the results of her visit to the Clinic, for whose advanced methods she now is a booster.

BRUSHING AWAY AN OLD FEAR

"BRUSH UP AND DOWN, not sideways," the instructor drills her pupil in this novel schooling before an over-size model which shows just where all teeth are that must be kept clean.

teeth, but to grin in the dentist's chair while those teeth are kept healthy is definitely another matter. The older generation may think it a miracle, but thousands of young patients at New York City's Guggenheim Dental Clinic have learned that a visit to the dentist can be an exciting adventure.

Children in public and parochial schools are visited by a mobile laboratory unit which makes preliminary examinations without the use of frightening instruments. When they come to the Guggenheim Clinic in the company of teachers and groups of their school friends the youngsters awalt their turns in a room made reassuringly friendly by murals of familiar nursery rhymes.

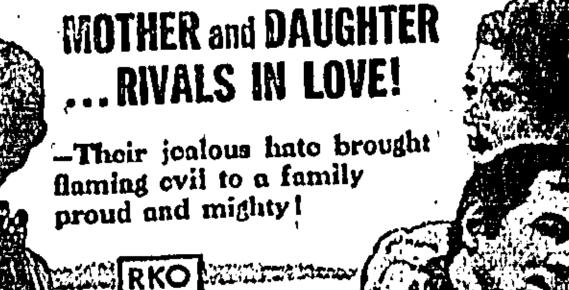

Attendants trained in the psychological aspect of dental practice with children, discuss teeth charts and treatment with each patient, trying in every way to remove that apprenhension and fear which a generation ago went hand in hand with a child to the dentist's chair.

Although the Guggenheim Dental Clinic, in its five-story structure which cost $930,000, is the largest of its kind in the world, the best of treatment is given to children regardless of ability to pay for X-rays, fillings, straightening and even childhood dentures.

With the strong emphasis placed upon non-frightening technique, the vast clinic systematically sees that there are no long waits to breed fearful thoughts in young patients. Likewise each child is guaranteed an hour's work in the course of which the attending dentist lets his patient play with some of the instruments he uses. Toothbrush drill for the youngsters not only teaches them to brush up and down rather than sideways, but makes a game of it by having a dozen children brushing away, each at his own handbasin. At the conclusion of the drill, the brushes may be taken home. It is little wonder that the clinic is known as the "place where they don't hurt you."

Eugene O'Neill's 'Mourning Becomes Electra", currently at the King's Theatre.

The plot of this now famous play goes back to the Greeks. It was adapted by O'Neill from "Oresteia", a set of three plays by Aeschylus, father of the Greek drama. The story of the murder of King Agamemnon by his wife, Clyternnestra, and the vengeance visited upon the latter and her paramour by her wo children, Elektra and Orestes, is transferred to a New England setting in the days when women's finery was voluminous.

Hollywood connot resist getting an original, though not ancient, Greek into the cast of characters and so we have Katina Paxinou: of "For Whom The Bell Tolls" fame, as the New England Clytemnestra. Raymond Massey is the new Agamemnon. Rosalind Russell is the new Elektra and Michael Redgrave the new Orestes. It would have been difficult to as-semble a finer cast but, the critics say, a play created for the stage can seldom be improved by scenario writers.

Filmgoers may be misled by the display posters for the film into thinking that Edgar Buchanan, Mildred Natwick and Sara Allgood are three of the children. They may be among Miss Loy's problems but they are decidedly not members of ner brood. Jeanne Crain, however, is one.

A highlight of the film Myrna Loy's appearance in a bathing suit of the pre-Mack Sennett type, complete with swim shoes, coarse black stock-ings, black billowy bloomers and a cape skirt that falls down to the knees.

Edgar Buchanan has a nice role. He's the family doctor who comes in to remove the children's tonsils en masse.

For travellers there was a thick warm checked travelling skirt, looking rather like a small carrug with fringed ends. It simply wrapped neatly round the waist beneath a large coat. For evening, vary the old routine, and try wearing a dark sweater with a long tight wrapped skirt of tortan. Those in warmer climates might like the same idea if carried out in silk jersey for the sweater, and plaid taffeta for the skirt. Other ideas for evening were dazzling white sweaters, hand-knitted and embroidered with sequins. One was accompanied by a lacy white knitted stole, rather reminiscent of grandmother, but none the less appealing. There is no doubt about it-wrap a by woman up in a lacy shawl, and she manages to look helpless to a delightful degree.

Something nice won't do. It must be something right. Right for your costume, right for your type and colouring, right for the use to which you intend to put it.

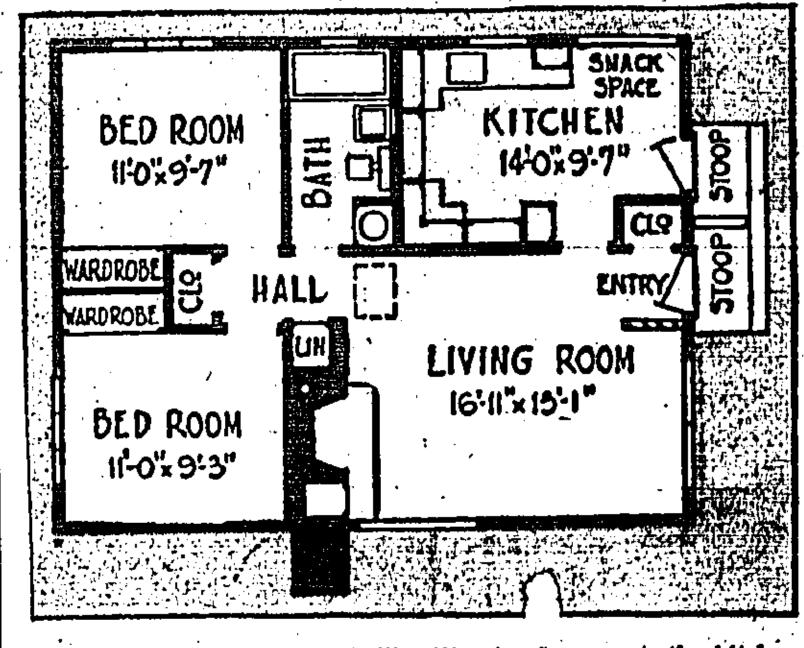

Exquisite French gloves, luxurious (if fake) jewellery, dellcate looking shoes, sheer hostery, are all on the counters to tempt you. Wise investments if wisely planned . . . a waste of money if they're not.

First, decide whether they are to be for a special costume and for special wear day or evening, dress or sport. Your tweed or flannel suit is worthy of two sets of accessories on the sports side for casual wear, on the dressy side if you wish to wear it after five.

The only accessories you can wisely buy with no particular costume in mind are the classics -such as a pair of chamois colour fabric gloves, a pair of pigskin, some "every day" neutral nylons, a good buy in a cultured pearl earring, another gold or silver bracelet to add to your collection.

KITCHEN CABINETS are arranged along opposite walls in this plan for a house with a basement. A small dining space is provided, too.

WHEN THE HOUSE is built without a basement, the kitchen is larger. Both plans provide for good-sized living room, two bedrooms.

TESTING TIME COMES FOR THE BRACKETED SECONDS

Saints Play S. China & Overseas Meet Pandas BY "GRANDSTAND"

By a freak coincidence in the Senior League softball schedule this week's regular programme will feature two skirmishes in which all the four teams tied for second place in the current league standings of the Blue and Gold sections will participate.

After being inactive on the diamond for almost a month, St. Joseph's make a re-appearance to battle a determined South China nine, while the Overseas wage war on the Pandas in an all-Chinese classic.

The Ladies' League fixtures are not expected to furnish the usual thrills this week, but nevertheless, the games will be well attended by fans who will trek all the way up to King's Park to watch the frolicking femmes.

will be interesting as the infield. latter, who are only one game behind the League leaders, are capable of upsetting the heet.

NTRE-FORWARD PILKINGTON

If an English Football League team seeking promotion had played 38 of the season's 42 matches, scored 114 goals to 37, won 27, drawn three and so gained 57 points, supporters would have the flags out prematurely and the celebration fixed, so certain would they feel that nothing could prevent their club's triumph.

This is in fact England's record in post-war international matches. The England "B" team, started two sensons ago, can show five wins and only two defeats (both in Europe) in seven games. The English Football League have fared even better in the Inter-League competition, having won 12 of 13 contests. In the remaining match a powerful Scottish League XI forced a draw at Newcastle in March 1948. English superiority in these League internationals was expressed in the emphatic terms of 51 goals to 13.

There is nothing in these figures to justify anything but constructive criticism of the team and certainly nothing to merit or support the periodic moaning in some quarters when a setback has occurred. Defeats are always disappoint. qualities were required to hole ing, and the reverses in the World Cup series at Rio de Janerio, even though they, came at the end of a long and arduous English season, were naturally not relished by anyone possessing national pride. Yet in the matter of prestige the English players and selectors have little over which they need reproach themselves when looking back over the past five years.

NOTHING would have more completely surprised the Norfolk jacket and knickerbocker brigade of early golfers than to know how respectable a game golf was eventually to become for the young.

Even 80 years ago the boy golfer was faintly frowned upon as an exponent of a selfish, as against a team, game—though nobody told him where in the holfdays he could find 21 other boys with whom to play the latter.

His hours of play were limited: his elders spled to detect him in failure to replace a divot; he was more welcome the pro's shop with its friendly aroma of shavings, leather and glue, than in the clubhouse.

Having played in goal since the age of eight, and having discovered early in life that the spirit of the fastest schoolboy bowler could be broken in halfan hour if resisting temptation to score, you let the ball hit the bat with a dull thud, and then walked away while the wicketkeeper retrieved it, I concluded that more heroic a four-foot putt with a lefthand borrow, when that was what you wanted more than anything else in the world.

That was not the popular view.
